

Walid El-Nahal

Walid El-Nahal is an Infectious Diseases fellow at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine. He attended medical school at the University of Virginia School of Medicine, where he remained afterwards to complete an Internal Medicine residency followed by a year as a chief Internal Medicine resident. He subsequently became a fellow at Johns Hopkins University and in the course of his time there also completed a Master of Health Sciences at the Bloomberg School of Public Health.

His research is focused on healthcare quality and the impact of health policy changes on clinical outcomes for patients with infectious diseases. His latest work has centered around people living with HIV, and he is currently a member of the Ryan White Medical Providers Coalition. During the COVID-19 pandemic he has been studying the effect of the transition to telemedicine on the quality of outpatient HIV care.

